After a while, teaching the same beginner lessons repeatedly can become monotonous, and earning $15-20 per hour may not be fulfilling enough. With an independent business, you'll have the freedom to create your own curriculum, schedule, and pricing model. This career path requires dedication, as it's not for everyone, but it offers a sustainable living with flexibility, creative control, and the potential for a high income. Specializing in areas like business English or test preparation can lead to higher earnings - up to $4,000 per month. However, running an independent business demands more than just teaching skills; you'll need to be self-motivated, entrepreneurial, and able to market yourself effectively, manage finances, and handle administrative tasks. Despite the challenges, teaching ESL independently is rewarding as it provides autonomy, flexibility, and opportunities for growth. Choose a suitable platform for teaching, whether it's Skype or something more advanced, ensuring ease of use for both you and your students. Build a website using user-friendly platforms like WordPress, Wix, or SquareSpace to showcase your teaching model, introduce yourself, and share student testimonials. Advertise free resources, trial classes, and provide contact information for interested students. Utilize social media, forums, YouTube, and blog posts with SEO techniques to promote your company.
